INTRODUCTION

The Regional Autonomy Law (Law No.22/99), requires each district to plan the development of tourism villages in their respective areas. This aims to improve community welfare and regional income and can maximize village potential.

A tourist village is a village that has a unique attraction that can be used as a tourist destination. Such unique attractions can be traditions, cultures, or natural beauty. The tourist village is colored by various supporting activities, such as dance, music, agricultural and gardening systems, and traditional food. The environment of the tourist village must be original and maintained. The Ministry of Culture and Tourism regulation states that a tourism village is a unity between facilities and infrastructure supporting tourism, accommodation, and attractions, which are presented in an order of community life. All these components are integrated with the prevailing tradition (Sugiartawan et al., 2019).

The criteria for a tourist village are three stages: first stub, second developing, and third independent. Tourism villages are said to be able to live independently if they have been able to utilize their potential and can package and sell various tourist attractions as tourist attractions without the help of investors.

Gunungmanik Village is located in the middle of another village with much natural resource potential and remains calm and fresh. Most of the residents of Gunungmanik Village are vegetable farmers. Local customs and wisdom still exist in Gunungmanik Village. In addition, there is religious tourism in Jatirasa Hamlet, Gunungmanik Village, namely the tomb of Sheikh Sanggar Waringin.

In terms of economy, villages' economic structure differs from that of cities. The structure of the rural economy does not promise as much profit as that of the urban economy. This resulted in development only concentrated in urban areas, while development of the rural regions was less considered necessary. Even though rural development needs to be done as one of the alternative tourism that can encourage rural development. Tourism village development is based on management principles such as utilizing local community resources and infrastructure, benefiting local communities, encouraging reciprocal relations with local communities, and implementing rural tourism product development.
